Jung, Myth, and Biography 23 narratives for the alienated modern psyche. Indeed, I will suggest that the texts provide a sequence, that Memories works peculiarly as a sequel to Job in a myth that is at the same time personal, cultural, postmodern and cosmic. This is despite the fact that Memories is a highly complex and conflicted text.

Myth is Jung's writing of self as long as myth is a radical typological openness to endless storytelling. Once allegorical impulses to abstract from mythos into universal principles occur, then the writing moves into grand theory; its language divorced from the unconscious and the self. Jung's creation myth is myth in the creation of self.
